Slumberer Has Nightmare-The Lawrence Case Heard To-day. Committee Meetings.

Manchester Bureau, Times-Dispatch

It is learned that the charge of kidnapping, preferred against Lawrence, will probably he dismissed, as witnesses can be secured, who will prove that Elam was not on the wagon, on which' he claims to have been forcibly detained.

The other charge of assault will also probably be dropped, as Lawrence claims that he can prove that he was with his fellow-workers on the whole trap to Pe-scene. All were heavily armed. Near the suspected place they were joined by Captain Whitlock, Sergeant Sowell, Sergeant Gibson, Sergeant Wiltshire, George Pollôck and a dozen other officers. The house was quickly and silently surrounded. Then it was searched, but a bitter disappointment resulted. The game was not there. The people in the house, a colored family, declared he had not been there. They said further that they knew nothing about him.

The officers then dispersed and returned to their beats and stations.

Saw the Fugitives.

Saw the Fugitives.

Early in the day Officer Balley was informed that a man answering the de-scription of Goode was seen near the jail. The officer went to the scene and jail. The officer went to the scene and verified the report. A negro wearing a light cap, striped light coat and tan shoes was seen going across the branch out the Chesapeake and Ohlo tracks. A search was made, but the fugitive had again eluded the law.

'Another report was received from an employe of the Virginia Laundry, located at the foot of Second Street. He said that early yesterday morning, about 5 o'clock, he saw a negro creep out of a clump of bushes between the railiread tracks and the fence surrounding the laundry, and make away out the track. The negro limped as he walked.

The negro limped as he walked.
There is every reason to believe this man was Goode.
Still another report was received that a man had been seen in the vicinity of Maddox Hill. Officers went there, and searched everything in sight, but no trace of the negro was found.

Chief Huloc established his night station at his office in the City Hall, at which place he received reports of the movements of his men, and gave out his instructions.

movements of his men, and gave out his instructions.

Major Howard was on duty a long time at his headquarters at the patrol station, and gave all the aid he could. Later he went to the Virginia Hospital to remain near the inspector and to keep in touch with the physicians.

Captain Tomilinson and his aids, none of whom had slept for two nights, remained on the watch all night.

At a late hour word was received by Sergeant Sowell and Officer Schleif that Goode was still in the city. They immediately reported to Captain Tomilinson, and went out to work on what clues they could muster up.

and went out to work on what clues they could muster up.

A score of officers are doing special work on the case, and all the others on the force have offered their sorvices while off duty. None of the men wish to go off duty until the murderer is caught, do or alive.

There has a veg been a more universal display of affection for one man than that shown by the men on the force for their inspector.

Wild Goose Chase.

Last night Detective Wren was given a tip that "something was doing" near the old pump house. The tircless officer lost no time in getting to the place. He found, however, that the rumor had no foundation, except that a negro answering the description of Goode had been seen in that vicinity.

That Detective Gibson was not shot by Goode, the night he was located at the Second Street house, is probably due to the fact that the negro held out the hope that he would be overlooked in the search, and not by any generous impulse on his part.

on his part.
When the detective went upstairs in when the detective went upstern with mky darkness and stood at the door between the front room and that in which the negro was hiding, his figure was outlined in distinct silhouette against the light from the electric arc on the corner, which shone through the front windows.

light from the electric are on the corner, which shone through the front windows.

The detective carried his life in his hands for that moment. He was in plain view of the negro, while the latter was covered by the gloom of the room.

As soon as, the detective's eyes became accustomed, to the darkness, he saw a shadow-blacker than the rest against the will, near the window. It moved.

"Come here," called the officer, as he pointed his revolver at the man.

But Goode gave one mighty leap out the window. The detective fired at the same time, and then ran to the window, and fired down at the negro again. Then he ran down stairs and down the hill after the negro. But the latter's start was too much, and he was lost.

Detective McMahon, who had charge of the lower part of the house, heard the shooting. He ran to the door and saw a man scurrying down the hill. He ran after, him at a rapid rate, and before he reached the bottom he had the man by the collar. He saw at once that ne was not, the murderer for whom they were searching.

"I ain't the man you want, hoss," he said, "I'm General Randolph. The man you want is running up that way"—indicating Bacon Street.

Detective McMahon released the man, who was later arrested, and ran out Bacon Street. He saw no one, but searched closely the road as he ran. He met a man leading a horse. The man told him he hadn't seen any one as he came along. Then he turned back and met Defective Gibson. The two made in quiries of persons living along the street, and learned that the fugitive had preceded Detective McMahon scarcely a minute, They found a house, through the side for the which they were told the negro had gone down on the Seabourd Air Line tracks. They searched the underbrush, stables, cars and ditches, all to no avail.

For this offense he got ten years in the penitentiary. On May 21, 1902, he was granted a conditional pardon by Governor Montague.

Since that time he has not run afoul the relies duartment. If he has continued the relies duartment if he has continued the relies duartment.

Since that time he has not run afoul of the police dpartment. If he has continued in his criminal career, his work had not come to the attention of the police until the killing of Richard Fox last Saturday night.

The negro is a factory hand, and came here from North Carolina. When he was arrested in 1856 he gave his age as nineteen years. He is known by few negroes, and those who do know him are in fear of him, as he had the appearance of a cesperate man, and was usually heavily armed.

The police had been informed of this sunday morning. This was just at short while after the shooting of Fox. He went into he house as he had been in the custom of doing.

"Jim, going to stay all night," he said. Then he went upstairs and lay across the bed occupied by Jim Johnson.

"He told me," said Johnson yesterday, "that he had just shot a man. He didn't know whether he had kiled him or not, but that he knew he hit him, for he never missed anything he shot at. Then he showed me some spots of blood on his suspenders, and the pistol with which he did the shooting."

Goode slept until late Sunday. He went away during the day, but came back and remained at the house that night. On Monday morning he again wont away, and did not return that night.

The detectives, who have had a woman under surveilance as a friend of Goode's learned that she went to Petersburg on Monday night. It is now believed that he also went to Petersburg on Monday night. It is now believed that he also went to Petersburg on Wednesday he again slept at the Nichols house.

Lavinia Nichols said yesterday, after being put through the "sweating" process, that she believed "Goode was at her house on Thursday night, although she was not positive.

"He could come in anytime without jetting me know about it," se said.

Previously she had sated that she knew of no such person as Goode, and to a Times-Dispatch man she said she never heard of him until she read the story of the murder of Fox.

This was a paipable falsehood, as the name of Goode had never been mentioned in connection with the murder until Inspector Shinberger had been shot. The reason for withholding the name was appletous-character.

INDIGNITY PUNISHED.

A negro youth last evening passed the residence of Policemna Isaac Rogers and residence of Policemna Isaac Rogers and threw kisses at his two daughters, aged thirteen and fifteen years. They reported the insuit to their father, who, with a party of friends, chased the negro six blocks. When they overtook the fleeing negro, two men caught him, and Policeman Rogers clubbed him over the head with his billy until he was unconscious. Many criticised the officer severely until the provocation became known, and now the opinion generally expressed is that the punishment wasn't severe enough. The negro is in jail charged with attempt to commit assault.
